

POPPERS

The image of a couple rolling down the road on a big ole' Harley is an American classic that has to be right up there with baseball and apple pie. True love in the wind and with the wind is what this tale is about.

Patrick Kelley, an old school biker, was born on a farm out west in Colorado where he learned fast, the art of repair. On the farm, if something broke, you didn't replace it. You fixed it. It was Patrick's Grand Dad who taught him his old school ways. Today the term "Old School" gets thrown around as if it's the newest of expressions in a passing crazy fad. For Patrick, old school is a way of life.

Back on the farm, Grand Dad rode an old Knucklehead Harley-Davidson and Patrick had his own chopped Honda CD 200 that he rode back and forth to high school. Both bikes were built, rebuilt and maintained by Patrick and his Grand Dad.

After high school, Patrick went to the University of Colorado on a college football scholarship where he studied computers. Beyond college Patrick coached college football in Division 2 at Adam State. Later his computer knowledge landed him a job with ESPN Sports Channel working in computer engineering. It was during this job that Patrick would meet his true love, Pamela, who is pictured riding on the back of this
